10 U.S. Army Executes New Network Modernization Strategy

Lt. Col. Carlos Wiley, Scott Newman, and Vivek Agnish

The U.S. Army late last year began equipping brigade combat teams with its first package of radios, satellite systems, software applications, smartphones, and other components that provide connectivity from an operations center all the way down the chain of command.

18 The Imperative of Aligning Systems Engineering and Life Cycle Logistics Bill Kobren

DoD's Better Buying Power initiative makes tight alignment necessary of requirements, acquisition, and sustainment communities across a program's life cycle.

26 DoD and Industry Program Interactions Brian Schultz

There is no "one size fits all" model for the relationship between government and contractor. A review of the dynamics, events, and lessons that both parties should consider.

32 Public-Private Partnerships Dave Floyd and Tom Gorman

Current budget issues highlight the need to leverage the best capabilities across the public and private industrial base to achieve the best value for the money in weapon system support.

Up and Away: The Market for Helium

BG John G. Ferrari (USA)

Helium, though abundant in the universe, is relatively rare on Earth. The United States urgently needs to preserve a strategic reserve of this essential ingredient in many advanced technologies and research while private sector demand and prices balloon and soar.
